A TEMPERANCE CRUSADE.

How a Remarkable Movement Was Started in Ceylon-Its

A correspondent, who has just re-turned from Ceylon, writes to the Christian World about a very remark-able temperance movement in that is land. It had a singular beginning. A wealthy Sinhalese and some of friends were having a jovial time in a tavern over their arrack. A dispute arose with the tavern keeper and the whole company determined never to touch arrack again. They founded a society which practically all the me of their village joined. The news o vernacular press, with the result that the idea was taken up rapidly in all the towns and most of the villages of South Ceylon. Largely attended meet-ings have been held, and, after speeches denouncing the liquor traf-fic, pledges are signed. Well-organized processions go through the villages singing temperance songs, which rouse great enthusiasm. The movement is distinctly a Buddhist movement, and the appeal is made to the doctrines of Buddha, though Christian missionaries are sometimes asked to speak. Those who break their pledges are rigorously dealt with. In Ceylon the liquor truffic is a government monopoly, and Buddha, though Christian missionaries though Buddhists, the missionary so cieties and planters' associations have many times petitioned against the li quor trade being encouraged, it has extended at an appalling rate during recent years. This new movement has greatly checked it; the taveras becoming deserted, and the liquor sellers, who rent from the government, taking a hint from their fraternity in this country, are already appealing for
